HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM LAST YEAR AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

For the fiscal year ended September 30, 2024, the Fund (i) outperformed its secondary benchmark index, the Alerian MLP Index (USD); and (ii) underperformed its primary benchmark index, the Alerian Midstream Energy Index (USD), and its broad-based benchmark index, the S&P 500 Index (USD).

WHAT FACTORS INFLUENCED PERFORMANCE

Overall relative underperformance was primarily driven by an overweight allocation to select crude oil-focused Master Limited Partnerships (MLPs). Underweight exposure to select outperforming midstream operators detracted as well.

Somewhat offsetting these relative detractors was the Fund's positioning among liquefied natural gas (LNG) operators. Positive stock selection was driven by underweight exposure to select underperforming stocks within the sector. Non-index exposure to an outperforming company focused on floating LNG terminals contributed positively as well.

POSITIONING

We think there are several reasons to remain optimistic in the investment proposition of the midstream asset class: a strong free cash flow yield with a substantial dividend component, the potential for growth of that cash flow supported by secular tailwinds, and improved balance sheets and sound corporate finance models. Our optimism is strengthened by the lower beta and commodity correlation that we have seen recently versus historical averages. We believe flexible strategies like the Fund remain the best way to invest in a sector that we think has many years of value creation ahead of it.
